

sure to turn off your “spot” when you’re finished to conserve battery and data.

However, using a public network does come with its own set of risks. Internet hackers can easily swipe your passwords and account information, so if you do activities like shopping and banking, save those tasks for when you’re on a more secure network.

READER TIP:

I do not have internet, but I have unlimited data on my phone. I have a computer and tether my phone to my computer when we need it. Which is pretty rare—we do most things on my phone (or husband’s phone, also unlimited) or at the library when we need to print (which isn’t often yet).
