

These incentives are usually available through employee-based programs, but some allow you to participate directly with your insurance company. Just log into or call your current insurance plan and ask about any wellness incentives they offer.

You can often receive discounts on fitness memberships or health products, depending on the type of insurance plan you have. Here are just a few examples:

- Percentage off or free gym membership
- Free trial of a weight loss program
- Percentage off yoga gear
- Percentage off acupuncture and chiropractic appointments
- Stop smoking discounts

Some of these programs are not available in every state and even though they're offered through your health insurance plan, they are often in addition to the coverage you currently have.

5. FIND A DIFFERENT PLAN

It does take time, but researching different health insurance policies and gathering quotes is a must if you want to save big. Just think—if you can save at least $10 a month on your premium, that's over $100 per year, which is incredibly worth it! While big box insurance companies are the most logical place to look, there are also lesser-known options that might work for you and your family, depending on eligibility.

For instance, the Affordable Care Act allows low-income individuals the opportunity to jump on a plan that was previously only affordable as a benefit for employees of a large company, which means you can get fairly decent coverage for less. If you're not familiar with Marketplace Insurance, you basically choose your plan based on income eligibility, and it's
