

If you end up being responsible for the bill, or it seems you owe more than you thought, call the office to request a second look, and make sure to ask if it could be a possible coding issue. They can fix it and resubmit your claim to see if that makes a difference. You can also search Google on your end to see what the code actually means—this will be a string of numbers on the bill from the doctor or hospital next to the date of service.

6. PRACTICE HOME CARE

Although not all medical problems require the services of a doctor, you have to weigh the pros and cons and decide for yourself whether or not to make the trip. And though you have to be careful about certain things you read on the internet, there are good sites and resources to help you try a medical remedy at home.

One of the more popular home remedies is essential oils. Even though they've only been recently trendy, they've been used medicinally for thousands of years. They work for so many things too!

There's a lot of debate about which oils to use and how to use them, but the best thing I can tell you is to be proactive about researching for yourself. Know what to look for in a quality oil, and purchase a reference guide to help use them properly. One of my favorites is the Essential Oils Desk Reference by Life Science Publishing.
