

Pharmaceutical reps are always pitching doctors new meds, and often leave samples behind for patients to try. It might not be as much as they used to (company spending on samples has gone down 25% since 2007)¹⁰, but as long as they're just sitting in cabinets, you might as well take advantage of them! I would say I've had about an 80% success rate when asking my doctor for a free sample.

If doctors don't have the samples you need on hand, ask if they would be willing to order some. Many pharmaceutical companies or prescription-specific websites feature a section where health care professionals can put in a sample request.

2. TAKE ADVANTAGE OF DISCOUNT DRUG CARDS

Prescription savings cards are the next best option if you don't have insurance, and there are hundreds of them out there. It never hurts to print out a few and see which ones will give you the greatest discount. I saw savings anywhere between $20-$60 when we used ours!

Here are the ones I recommend you try first:

- BetterRxCard.com
- TogetherRxAccess.com
- NACoRx.org
- RxAssist.org
- RxSavingsPlus.com
- FloridaDiscountDrugCard.com - FL residents only
- BigAppleRx.com - NYC residents only
