

DAY 22: TRIM YOUR TOILETRIES

Toiletries—a.k.a. toothpaste, deodorant, shaving cream, razors, lotions, etc.—are far from being considered a major expense, especially when you have bigger things to worry about like insurance and utilities. But...that still doesn't mean they can't make a big difference!

In fact, toiletries are some of the easiest products to save on because brand-name items are almost always on sale. Find a coupon to use on top of that, and you can secure yourself an amazingly great deal and pay practically pennies per item. But even if you don't have the time, energy, or desire to coupon, you can still save up to 40% with generic brands that work almost exactly the same way.

The other nice thing is you don't have to replace toiletries all that often. Many products last at least three to four months before you have to buy them again, although to be completely honest, I probably use them for much longer than that. My very blunt razor comes to mind as the most recent example!

Basically, though, this particular category is filled with loads of savings opportunities you'd be crazy not to take, and the following ideas will help you fill that toiletry cabinet for a lot less. Consider it the best way to save money on what you need, so you can put the extra cash towards something you actually want!

1. STOCK UP WHEN YOU SEE A SALE

Like I previously mentioned, sales on toiletry items happen all the time. It doesn't matter whether you're at Target, Walmart, or the closest drugstore, at least one or two brands have discounted their products to entice you to buy.

The best part is when you can find a coupon to match with the sale and make the deal even sweeter. Although scouring every deal matchup site and buying a Sunday paper every week is certainly an option, you don't have to
