

3. BUY IN BULK

The next time you're at Costco, Sam's Club, or BJ's, take a peek into the health and beauty section to crunch some numbers. Because toiletries don't go bad, it's easier to buy a pack of razors in bulk than it is to buy something like yogurt. And even though you can't generally use a coupon at these types of stores, it still ends up being a lot cheaper if you can't find the item on sale anywhere else.

Warehouse stores come with a yearly membership fee, but you can easily make your money back and more by going in with a family member or friend to share the discount. Just go shopping together every couple of months to get what you need, and split the savings. You can even split bulk items packaged together if you don't see yourself using that much in a year. Giant bottles of mouthwash and body wash sometimes take a long time to finish up, depending on how many you have in your family using them!

Another option is to consider a service like Dollar Shave Club or 99¢ Razor. While both offer subscription options (meaning you get razors delivered to you every month or every other month), 99¢ Razor also offers a bulk option for those who don't want to be signed up for a monthly fee. The prices are really affordable, and the quality is outstanding. Joseph has used the same blade for up to four months and still had a sharp cut!

READER TIP:

We use mouthwash, flossers, and toothpaste (name brands too!) from the dollar store. We like the Sam's Club brand of toilet paper, and I buy Dove bar soap and body wash there too (my son has eczema & that brand works best for him). We are Plus members and they have a sale on them every few months.
