

DAY 28: MAKE ENTERTAINMENT AFFORDABLE

Even though I consider myself an extreme homebody (introvert, anyone?), I still enjoy the chance to “get away.” It’s nice to focus on something other than work or the never-ending laundry pile and dishes in the sink. And to be honest, I need those little refreshers so I can be productive in all the other areas of my life.

My favorite stress relievers are visits to the beach, long bike rides, a night out at the movies, days spent at county fairs, or strolling along 5th Avenue in downtown Naples. But if it’s a night at home, then binge watching Netflix or reading books and magazines from the comfort of my cozy couch top the list, of course!

Lest you think this is ALL our family does, let me assure you that it most definitely is not. But every once in a while, it’s nice to spend a Saturday somewhere other than in between mounds of housework.

Thankfully, we’ve found many activities that end up being low-cost or free, without ever feeling like we’re missing out. Our dating years and first few years of marriage were spent living as frugally as possible, and we’ve since become self-made experts at finding creative ways to entertain ourselves for just pennies. In fact, we still do this, because now we have a couple expensive things on our list that we’d like to do someday, and saving in other areas will help make those things happen eventually!

So while a trip to Disney isn’t out of the question, there are multiple ways to make your next family activity less expensive. These seven ideas are a great place to start, and will keep your family entertained while you save up for the activities that do cost just a little bit more:
