

I'm a huge fan of rewards programs, and love when companies reward us for being loyal to their specific brand. The entertainment industry offers a few programs that are super easy to sign up for, and will reward you in multiple ways.

- Regal Cinemas Crown Club – Members of this club earn points towards free admission, snacks, and drinks for every dollar they spend on movie tickets and at the concession counter. We love discovering these little surprises whenever we use our Regal card!
- AMC Stubs – This membership does cost $12 a year, but if you go to the movies a lot, it's definitely worth it. Every $100 you spend gives you a $10 reward, and you'll always have free size upgrades on popcorn and soda.
- Kellogg's Family Rewards – Submitting receipts for various Kellogg's items you purchase helps rack up points towards gift cards, coupons, and discounts on entertainment. I was able to score a Buy One Get One Free ticket to a nearby zoo, which saved us $20!
- Hotel Rewards – Pick one or two hotel chains that you normally stay at when you travel and sign up for their loyalty program if you haven't already. Every night you reserve, you'll earn points that can add up to a free night. Just beware of expiration dates.

If you really want to get serious about earning rewards, you have to get organized. Start a separate notebook or file folder with all the rules for each program you join. I like to print out a rules sheet or FAQ for each program, just so I'm aware of how I earn rewards, when the points expire, and what the program offers in terms of rewards. You can also start a digital file for this in Evernote.
