

If you live in a college town, the benefits are even better. Sometimes you can even get free admission to art museums and college games!

5. USE YOUR LOCAL LIBRARY

Don't forget to visit your local library for even more fun and savings. The library is so much more than just books, and offers quite a few services and activities that are available for free to the public. Joseph and I use our library every week (sometimes multiple times a week!), and are continually amazed by all the events they have running.

Here are nine free things you can often do at your library:

- Join a Book Club. If you're not already involved in a book club, there is usually one happening at the library, or you'll find a bulletin board that lists public groups around the area. It might be a chance to read a new book, or discuss an old one.
- Take Your Kids to Storytime. Do something different for the morning or afternoon and go to the library for a story. Sometimes they even have famous authors come for a visit!
- Learn a New Skill. Local craft groups will often meet once a month at the library and anyone is welcome to join. Learn how to knit, quilt, make jewelry, or weave a basket.
- Research Your Family's History. If you grew up around the area, you'll find documents to help trace your ancestry. Plus, there's always fascinating stuff in the archives about your hometown you might not see anywhere else.
- Check Out a DVD. Redbox is pretty cheap, but sometimes you can borrow the same film for less. I know our library has an extensive collection of movies—old and new.
- Check Out an Audiobook. It's getting harder and harder to find time to sit down and read actual books. Listening to audiobooks in the car
