

How many times have you gone out and bought new office supplies because you either couldn't find what you already owned, or it wasn't cute enough? Believe me, I'm totally guilty of this! It's surprising how many pens, pieces of paper, and binder clips we find around our home if we take the time to get organized and really look.

I would encourage you to set aside a few minutes to organize what you have, and I promise you'll see right away how much easier it is to find something when it's labeled properly. You'll avoid going to the store and won't waste time searching for a supply you already have at home. It's a win-win!

For those extra supplies you don't need right away, keep them stored in a decorative box in your home office or closet. Whenever you run out of an item, be sure to check that box first, before heading out to replace what you need. This is also where you can store those extra back-to-school supplies you stocked up on during August and September.
