Also, I know Black Friday makes some of us cringe, but so many items are on sale that day that it's sometimes worth the extra hassle to find a steal. You never know...you might just discover an amazingly low price in the middle of all those crowds!

6. SKIP THE EXTENDED WARRANTY

If you do end up buying new instead of used, you probably don't need to add an extended warranty to your purchase. In fact, I would strongly encourage you not to buy one, and focus on reliability instead. An item that lasts for decades won't need to be replaced.

Many credit cards also offer a one-year or double-extended warranty in addition to the manufacturer's guarantee. Check with your credit card company to see if this is listed in the agreement or as one of their added benefits, and keep track of all the original documents and receipts in a separate file folder in case you need to file a claim. Your due diligence could get your item replaced for free!
