

I am horrible at reading the fine print, especially on something as boring as homeowner's insurance, but understanding your policy is the first step to any legitimate savings. You can't know what to save on if you have no idea what's covered in the first place!

Of course, coverage varies depending on your specific policy, but typically, these items are almost always included:

- Your home (and an attached garage) in the event that either is damaged
- Other structures on the property (e.g., shed)
- Contents inside your home and other structures
- Lodging in case your home becomes uninhabitable
- Personal liability and financial protection in case someone is injured on your property
