

transportation company or friend/family member, but just a few trips per month make a pretty good dent in the gas budget.

4. TRACK AND COMPARE PRICES

The majority of gas stations have sale days when the gas is a few cents cheaper than regular prices. It's good practice to mentally track these prices (or write them down if needed) based on location, day, and at what station so you know the best time to fill up.

You can also download the GasBuddy app (available on iOS and Android), which displays up-to-date pricing information about gas stations near you. I wouldn't drive miles out of your way to save $.03 per gallon, but if you live in an area with access to multiple gas stations, it's worth doing a price comparison before you head out!

Another option is to use a warehouse club gas station. You won't necessarily earn rewards for buying your gas from them, but you do get anywhere from $.05-$.15 cheaper than other stations in town, just by being a member.

5. TAKE ADVANTAGE OF REWARDS

Many grocery stores offer a gas/grocery combination where you earn cents off the gallon based on how much you spend at that specific store. As of this writing, these stores currently participate in a gas rewards program:

- Giant
- Ingles
- Kroger
- Martin's
- Price Chopper
