

Craigslist, Ebay, or JustParts.com will be your go-to sites for cheaper prices on things like side mirrors, windshield wiper motors, and more, but don't be afraid to do a little Googling too.

READER TIP:

Try calling places like Pick n' Pull or other auto wrecking yards. They keep an inventory of parts and you can save a ton by going there because the parts aren't brand new!

—Lindsey, WA

5. CONSIDER BECOMING A ONE-CAR FAMILY

Never in a million years could I have imagined we would become a one-car family. Now that I work from home, I do admit it's easier to survive with just one vehicle, but it wasn't impossible when we both held down outside jobs and were forced to make it work. It took a little more coordination with both our schedules, but it was one less piece of expensive equipment to worry about.

If you're tired of paying for repairs, upkeep, and extra insurance for an additional car, give this some serious consideration. We have spent far less with one vehicle than we did two, and I haven't regretted our decision since!

6. DON'T FORGET INCIDENTALS

We've already discussed fuel prices in Day 6, and we'll tackle car insurance in Day 8, but there are other costs to consider too, such as tolls and parking fees. While seemingly insignificant at first glance, they can quickly grow into unmanageable expenses if you're not careful.

To Save on Tolls: