

When it comes right down to it, saving on groceries completely depends on the price you pay. I would encourage you to start a price book (if you haven't already) and keep track of what your basic, and favorite, foods cost. This helps you know exactly when to stock up so you always score that rock-bottom price.

Many grocery shoppers write down their prices in a simple purse-sized notebook, but I prefer to keep track of mine on Google Drive so I can access it on my phone and update price points with ease.