

Maybe you're already disciplined in this area and hardly eat out at all. Good for you! You'll want to read the previous chapter on how to slash your grocery bill, but for the rest of us, I have a different challenge:

See if you can go thirty days without grabbing takeout and instead, focus on making meals at home. You can even schedule in some friend and family visits to take the pressure off creating all those meals—just don't tell them that's why you're doing it!

Anyone can do anything for thirty days, and this habit gives you the willpower you need to say no. Not to mention the potential hundreds of dollars you can save at the end of the month, which is an awesome perk in itself.
