

apart. In addition to improving their financial situation, they also improved their marriage.

Words of Wisdom

If you are prepared and knowledgeable about buying a car, the experience can be pleasant and rewarding. All that it requires is research and calculation. The more educated you are, the less chance you will end up with a “bad deal.”

It is important to remember that the minute you drive that car off the dealer's lot, it is “used” and “yours.” You can't return it like that department store purchase that you changed your mind about as soon as you arrived home. Getting rid of your car obligation is definitely not as easy as showing a receipt and getting a refund.

To recap this chapter's advice:

- Create a car budget.
- Comparison shop.
- Don't buy on impulse.
- Decide whether to lease or buy.
- Don't forget insurance.
- Don't let your car be repossessed (reread Chapter 1).
