
ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

Many people were such a help along my journey that a mention here in no way satisfies my indebtedness. Thanks to Susan Rothchild, who wondered what I'd done with the money; the children, who discovered that my daily moods depended on the Dow Jones Industrial Average; my brother-in-law Steve Solomon, who still calls with stock tips; Chris Harte, who shares his stock market newsletters; and Dan Okrent, who shares my attraction for ill-fated investments.

Several others provided material assistance, especially lodging, that gave me extra working capital that otherwise would have gone to hotel bills: Pat Jaffe, David Oppenheim, Howard Senzel and Norina Reif; Taylor and Christy Branch; plus Beth Dunlop and the offices of Florida International Realty for computer and duplicating services.

For introductions to various market experts I thank John Lahr, Alfie Dancona, the late Jon Bradshaw, Sam Schulman, Scott Armstrong, Tom Herman of the Wall Street Journal, Jim Adams of Forbes, and Robert Prechter, Jr. Among investment professionals who took extra time and effort to show me what they do all day, I thank Richard Bermont, Linda Garrett, Dick Davis, Chuck Epstein, Dan Gressel and Claudia Rosett, Martin Zweig, Steve Schulman, the staffs of the training centers at Merrill Lynch and at Prudential Bache, plus all others whose mention in the text itself carries with it my sincere thanks.

And for crucial intellectual and emotional support: Elizabeth Darhansoff; Abigail Thomas; my editor, Amanda Vaill; and her able associate, Lisa Kaufman.
