

experience, but I'm sure I would have done no worse with them than I did with the silver.

On the eve of this financial journey, I reviewed my previous gains and losses overall, and concluded that I'd "broken about even." So many friends and acquaintances told me they'd also "broken about even" on their stocks, and other such investments that I'm convinced this result is not unusual. From what I'd gathered at cocktail parties, there are millions of people who are constantly breaking even all across the country. This convinced me I was fully qualified to speak for the average investor.