

the discount brokers. Some of them actually stoop so low as to take Merrill Lynch advice, and then buy the recommended stock at Charles Schwab, where they pay less commission. At least I couldn't be accused of that cheap trick. I'd gone off with another high-class house, and every bit as expensive as Drexel. Still, like a cheating husband, I was deprived of the pleasure of bragging about my success with the one person who could best appreciate the improvement.