

be any chance that we're right. Do not lose your perspective when the time comes. It will take great courage to make money during this bull market, because in the early stages it will be easy to be too cautious. However, it will take even greater courage to get out near the top, because that's when the world will call you a damn fool for selling.

One thing I have learned is that if the majority does not laugh at or dismiss as worthless my long term market opinion, it is wrong. Given the fact that the market reflects the sum total of people's opinions, it must be ever thus. Whenever the world calls you a damn fool for doing anything involving investments, you know without a shadow of a doubt that it is they who are the fools. You are a fool only if you listen to them. Everyone wants to be a contrarian, but it takes many trials, tribulations and years of experience (i.e., mistakes) to learn when to act as a contrarian. If you have the courage to separate yourself from the herd because you suspect it might be stampeding over a cliff, the time to do it is before the herd reaches the cliff. That time is now.
