

and silver's price trends have confounded the precious metals enthusiasts, who for the entire period have argued that $1000 gold and $100 silver were "just around the corner" and that inflation was (and is) due to take off again "any time now." It hasn't happened. With deflation due to gain the upper hand in the investment markets, it is not likely to do so soon, either, short term rallies notwithstanding.

In contrast to the one-note approach, which has had an immense opportunity cost over the past decade and a half, competent market analysis can make your financial decisions timely and profitable. When the end of the deflation arrives, a swift shift to gold will be essential. Its low will present the buy of a lifetime, your last chance to put wealth into the form of real money at an advantageous price.
