

Figure 19-3, with a recent rally appended. “B” waves are typically selective, so the rebound currently being reported by the media is likely to remain restricted to a few top tier pieces. This rally should be providing a last chance for art collectors to sell off unwanted art and avoid the long erosion and doldrums that will characterize wave C.

Outlook

How low might some pieces go? Consider the artwork shown here, Andy Warhol’s “Race Riot,” which comprises four panels of the same black and white photo in different color tints. Is there any reason why this piece, which sold for $1.76 million in 1989 and “collapsed” to $627,000 in 1992, shouldn’t sell for six hundred bucks as a mere curiosity?

THE WALL STREET JOURNAL FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 20, 1992

Andy Warhol's "Race Riot" sold for $1.76 million in 1989. This time on the auction block it fetched $627,000.
