

1. Advance crediting

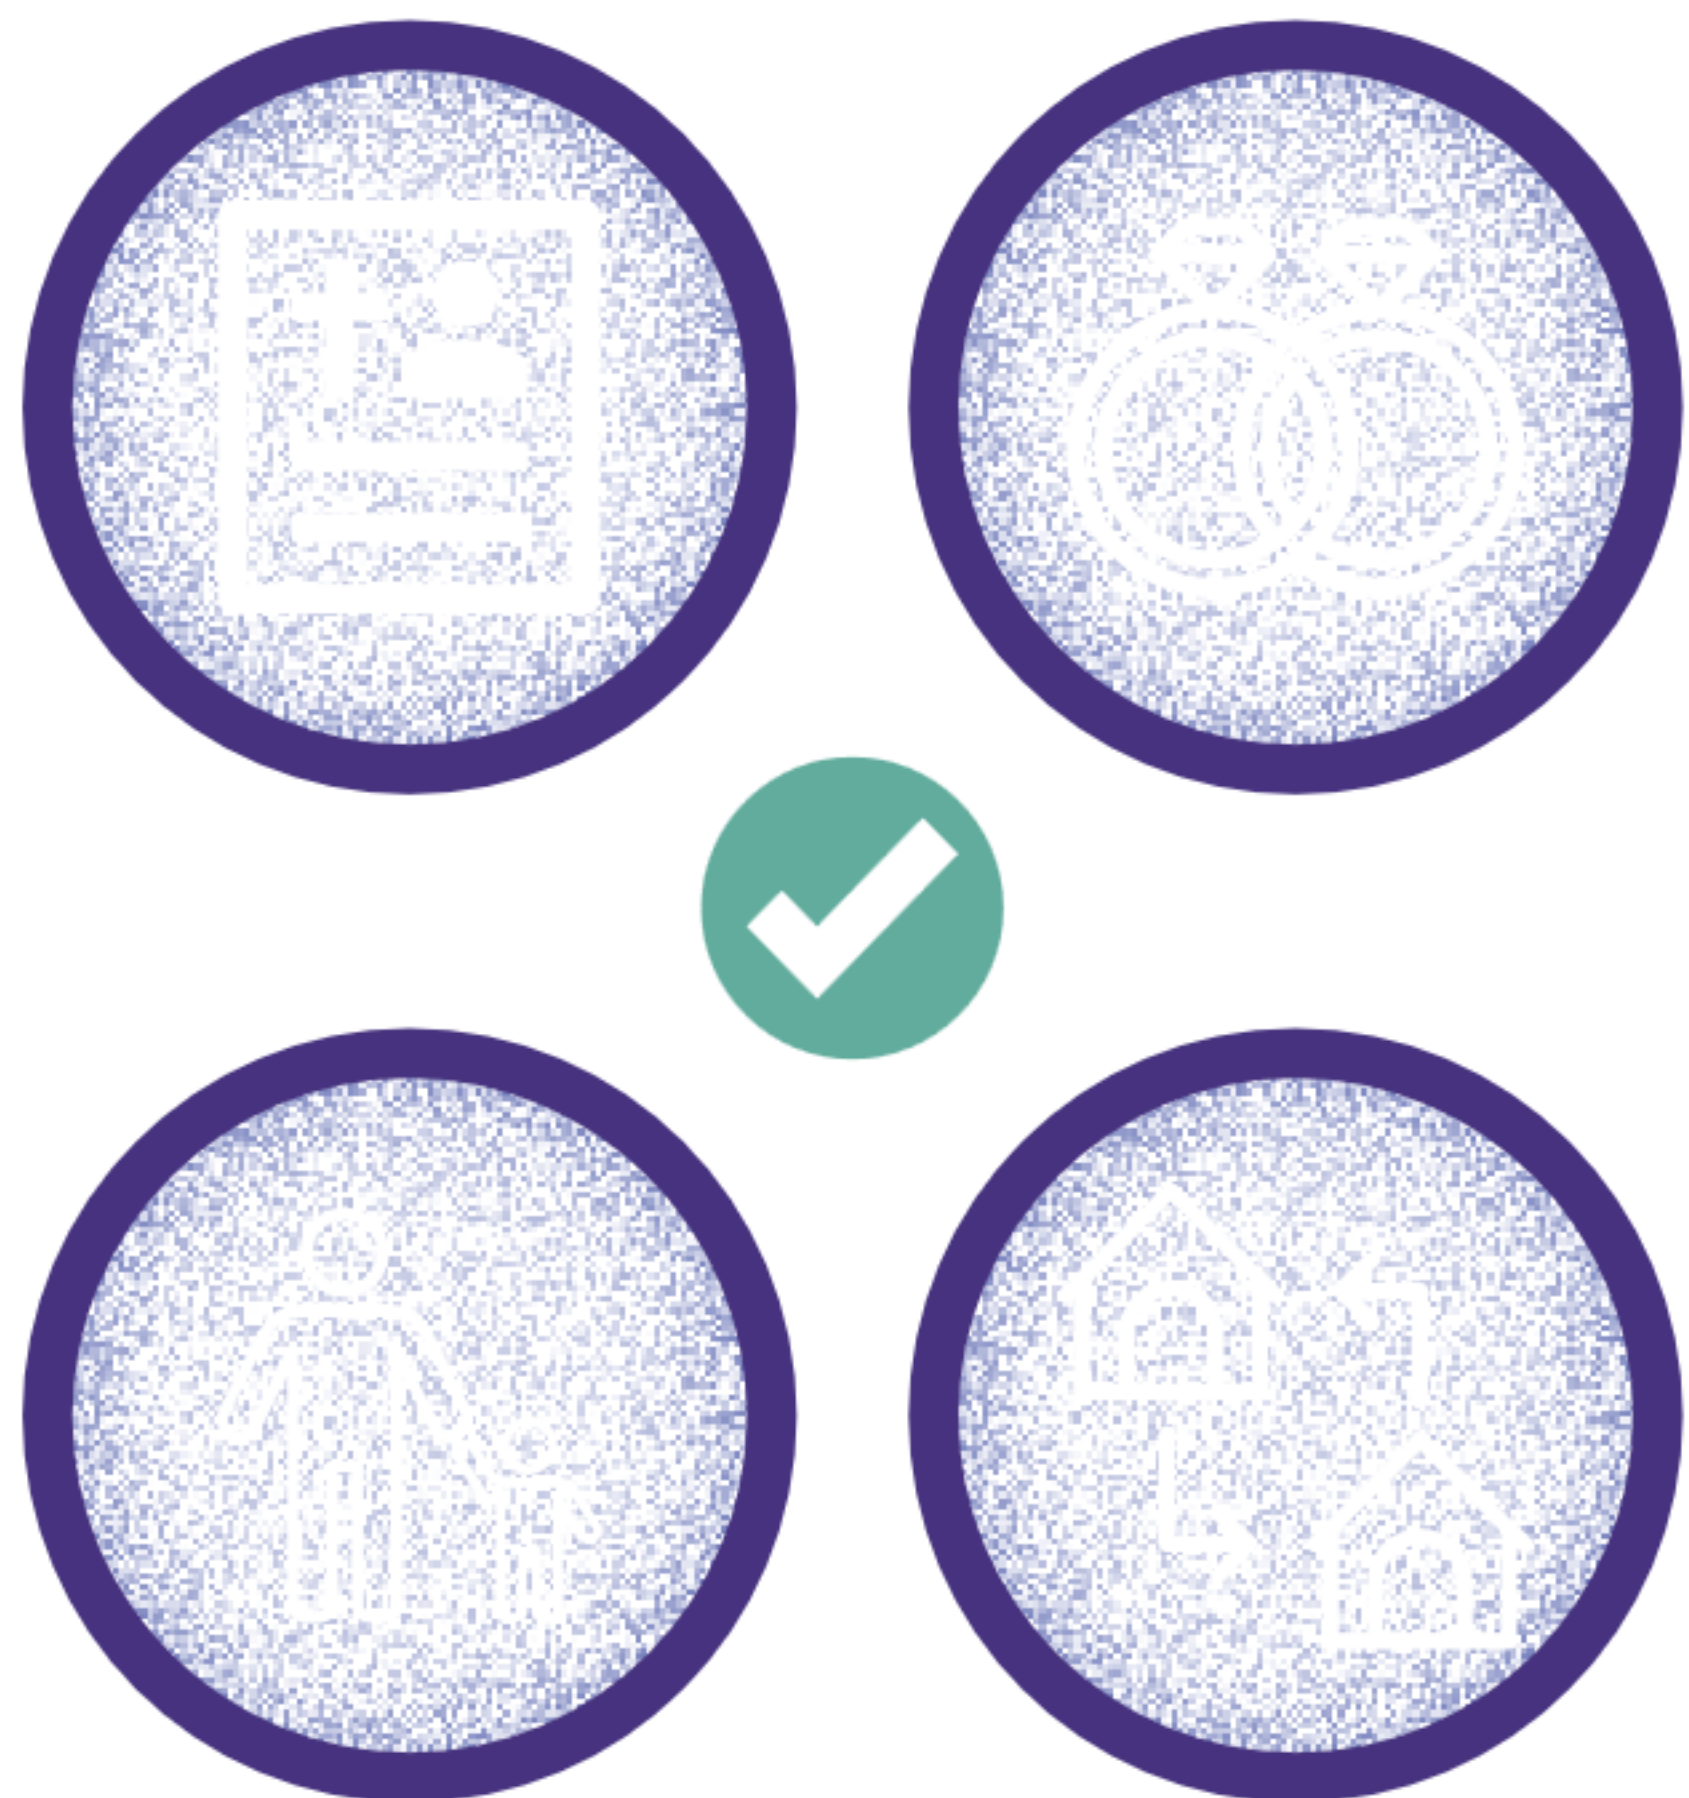

The leave is credited in advance at the beginning of the year like casual leave.

2. Accrual based Crediting

The employee earns the leave after working for a certain period of time. The leave is accrued (collected). It is credited either every month or every year. Paid Leave and Sick Leave are credited this way.

3. Event based Crediting

The leave is credited based on an event. Maternity Leave, Paternity Leave, Bereavement Leave, Marriage Leave and Relocation Leave are examples of event based crediting.

How many leaves you should give (credit) to your employees? This depends on how you debit the leaves.

How to debit leaves?

Suppose, Saturday and Sunday are a weekly off. An employee Ria has 10 leaves in her account. Ria takes leave from Friday to Monday. How many leaves will you debit from her account? Two or four.

You may debit the leaves using two methods

Calendar day method - In this method, you debit all the days of the week including weekends and public holidays.

Working day method - In this method, you debit only the working days when an employee is scheduled to work.

According to the calendar day method four days will be debited whereas as per the working day method leave of 2 days will be debited. You should check the state specific regulation for choosing calendar day or working day method of debit.
