Off Cycle Payments

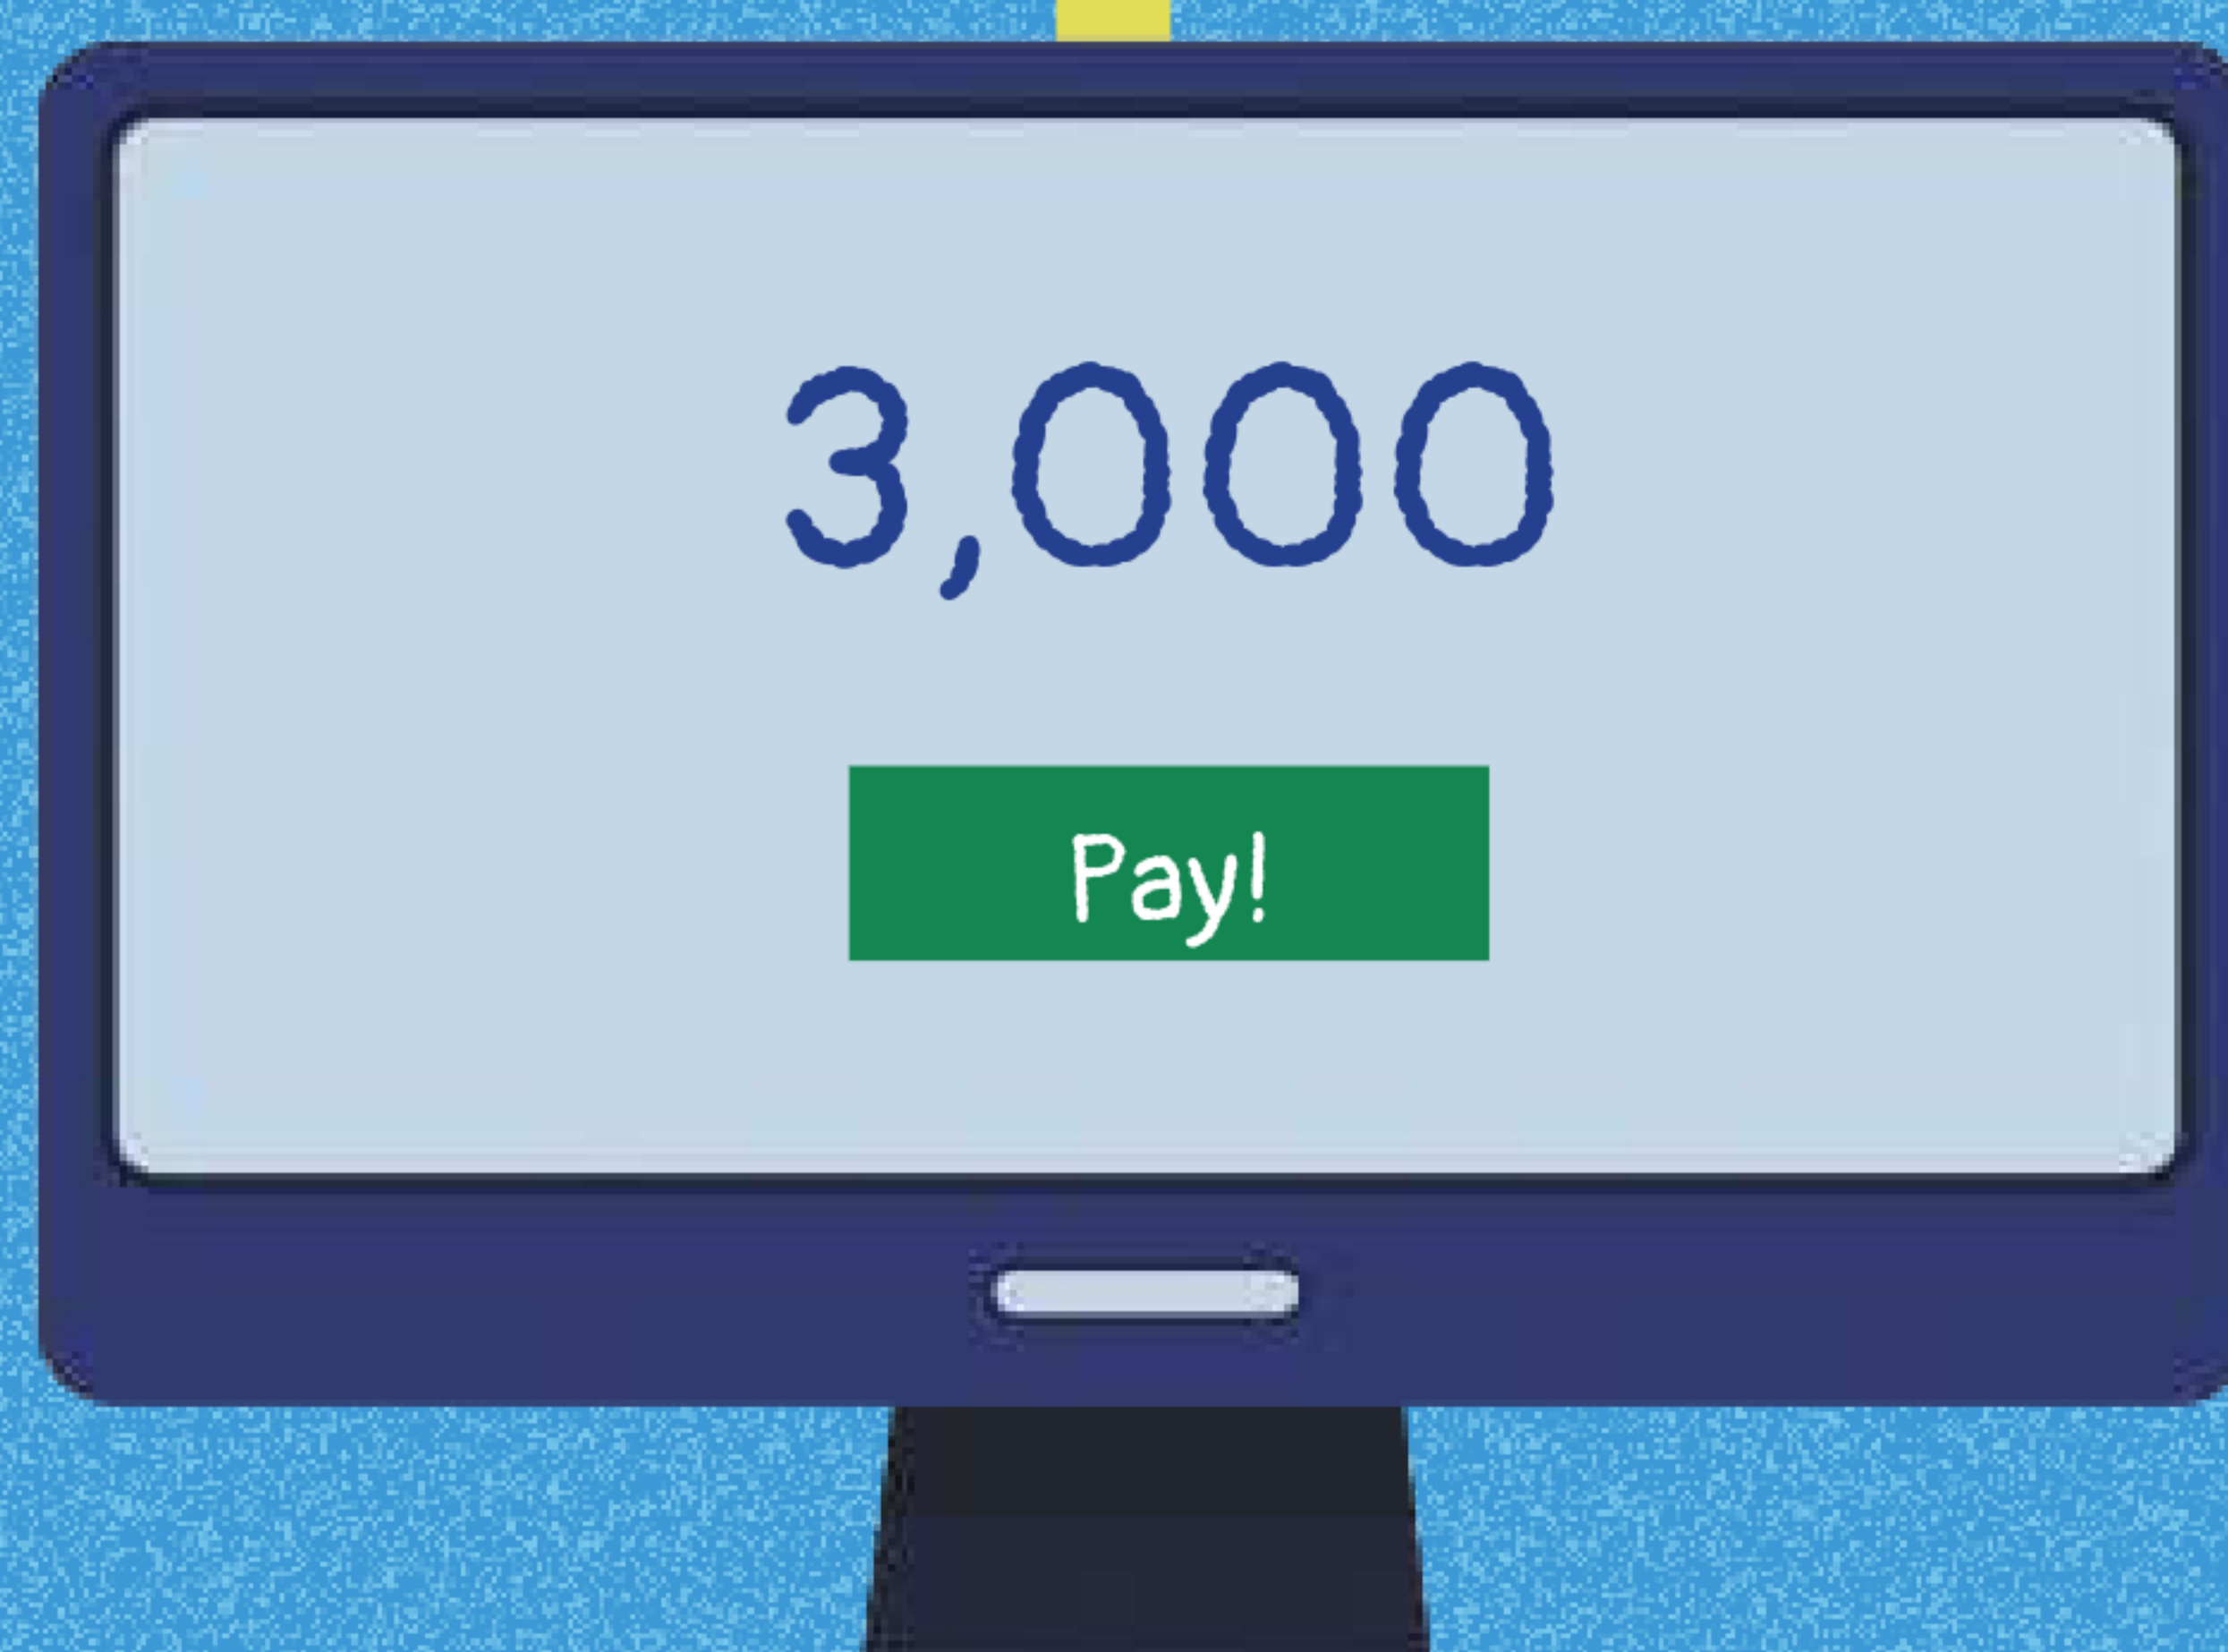

You may also pay your employees off-cycle. The primary reason for making payments is correction of payroll mistakes. The payroll mistakes include incorrect salary calculation, wrong deduction or miscalculation of overtime.

Suppose someone applied for leave and the manager forgot to approve.

The employee will not get the salary for those days in the month. The employee will have to wait till next month to get the money back.

In such cases, where the input comes to you after payroll is processed, you may run an off-cycle payment for the employee.

Off-cycle is also used for making incentive, overtime and other one time payments. You need to calculate and withhold (keep aside) the applicable compliance and tax amounts when making the payments. Another usage of off cycle is to pay reimbursement amounts to employees at frequent intervals.
