

Exit Management

The exit management is the process of managing the departure of an employee from the organization. It is also known as off-boarding or separation. The purpose of the process is to ensure a smooth transition of work. At the same time, you do not want the departure of the employee to affect the other employees. The other employees observe your behavior towards the departing employee and anticipate similar treatment.

If you do not treat your departing employees fairly and respectfully, the engagement levels of the other employees will decrease significantly. You must remember that this applies to all employees, regardless of their reasons for exiting.
