

2. Involuntary Exit

The involuntary exit is initiated by the organization. The organization may terminate employment as per the terms of the employment contract. The organization may ask an employee to serve the notice period or release the employee immediately by paying the amount in lieu (instead) of the notice period. The reasons for termination include:

- a. Misconduct - Breach of a code of conduct or policies.
- b. Performance - Inability to meet the performance standard results in a failed PIP
- c. Elimination of Position - The position is no longer required.

Practical Tip:

When termination is done as a result of a non-controversial reason, some organizations ask employees who are going to be terminated to resign voluntarily. In that case they receive all the benefits, such as payment for the notice period as per termination guidelines. However their service letter and background checks mention the reason for separation as "resignation". They are marked in the organization records as "Encouraged to Leave" employees. Use this judiciously.

3. End of Contract

This is the non-controversial reason for separation. This kind of separation happens when the employment contract ends. There could be several reasons for contract ending including:

The process of exit remains the same irrespective of the reason for exit.
