

Concealed Changes

Changes to any process, policy or benefit without prior information or notification.

Employee Policies

Dissatisfactory or discriminatory policies for transfers, demotions, overtime or leaves.

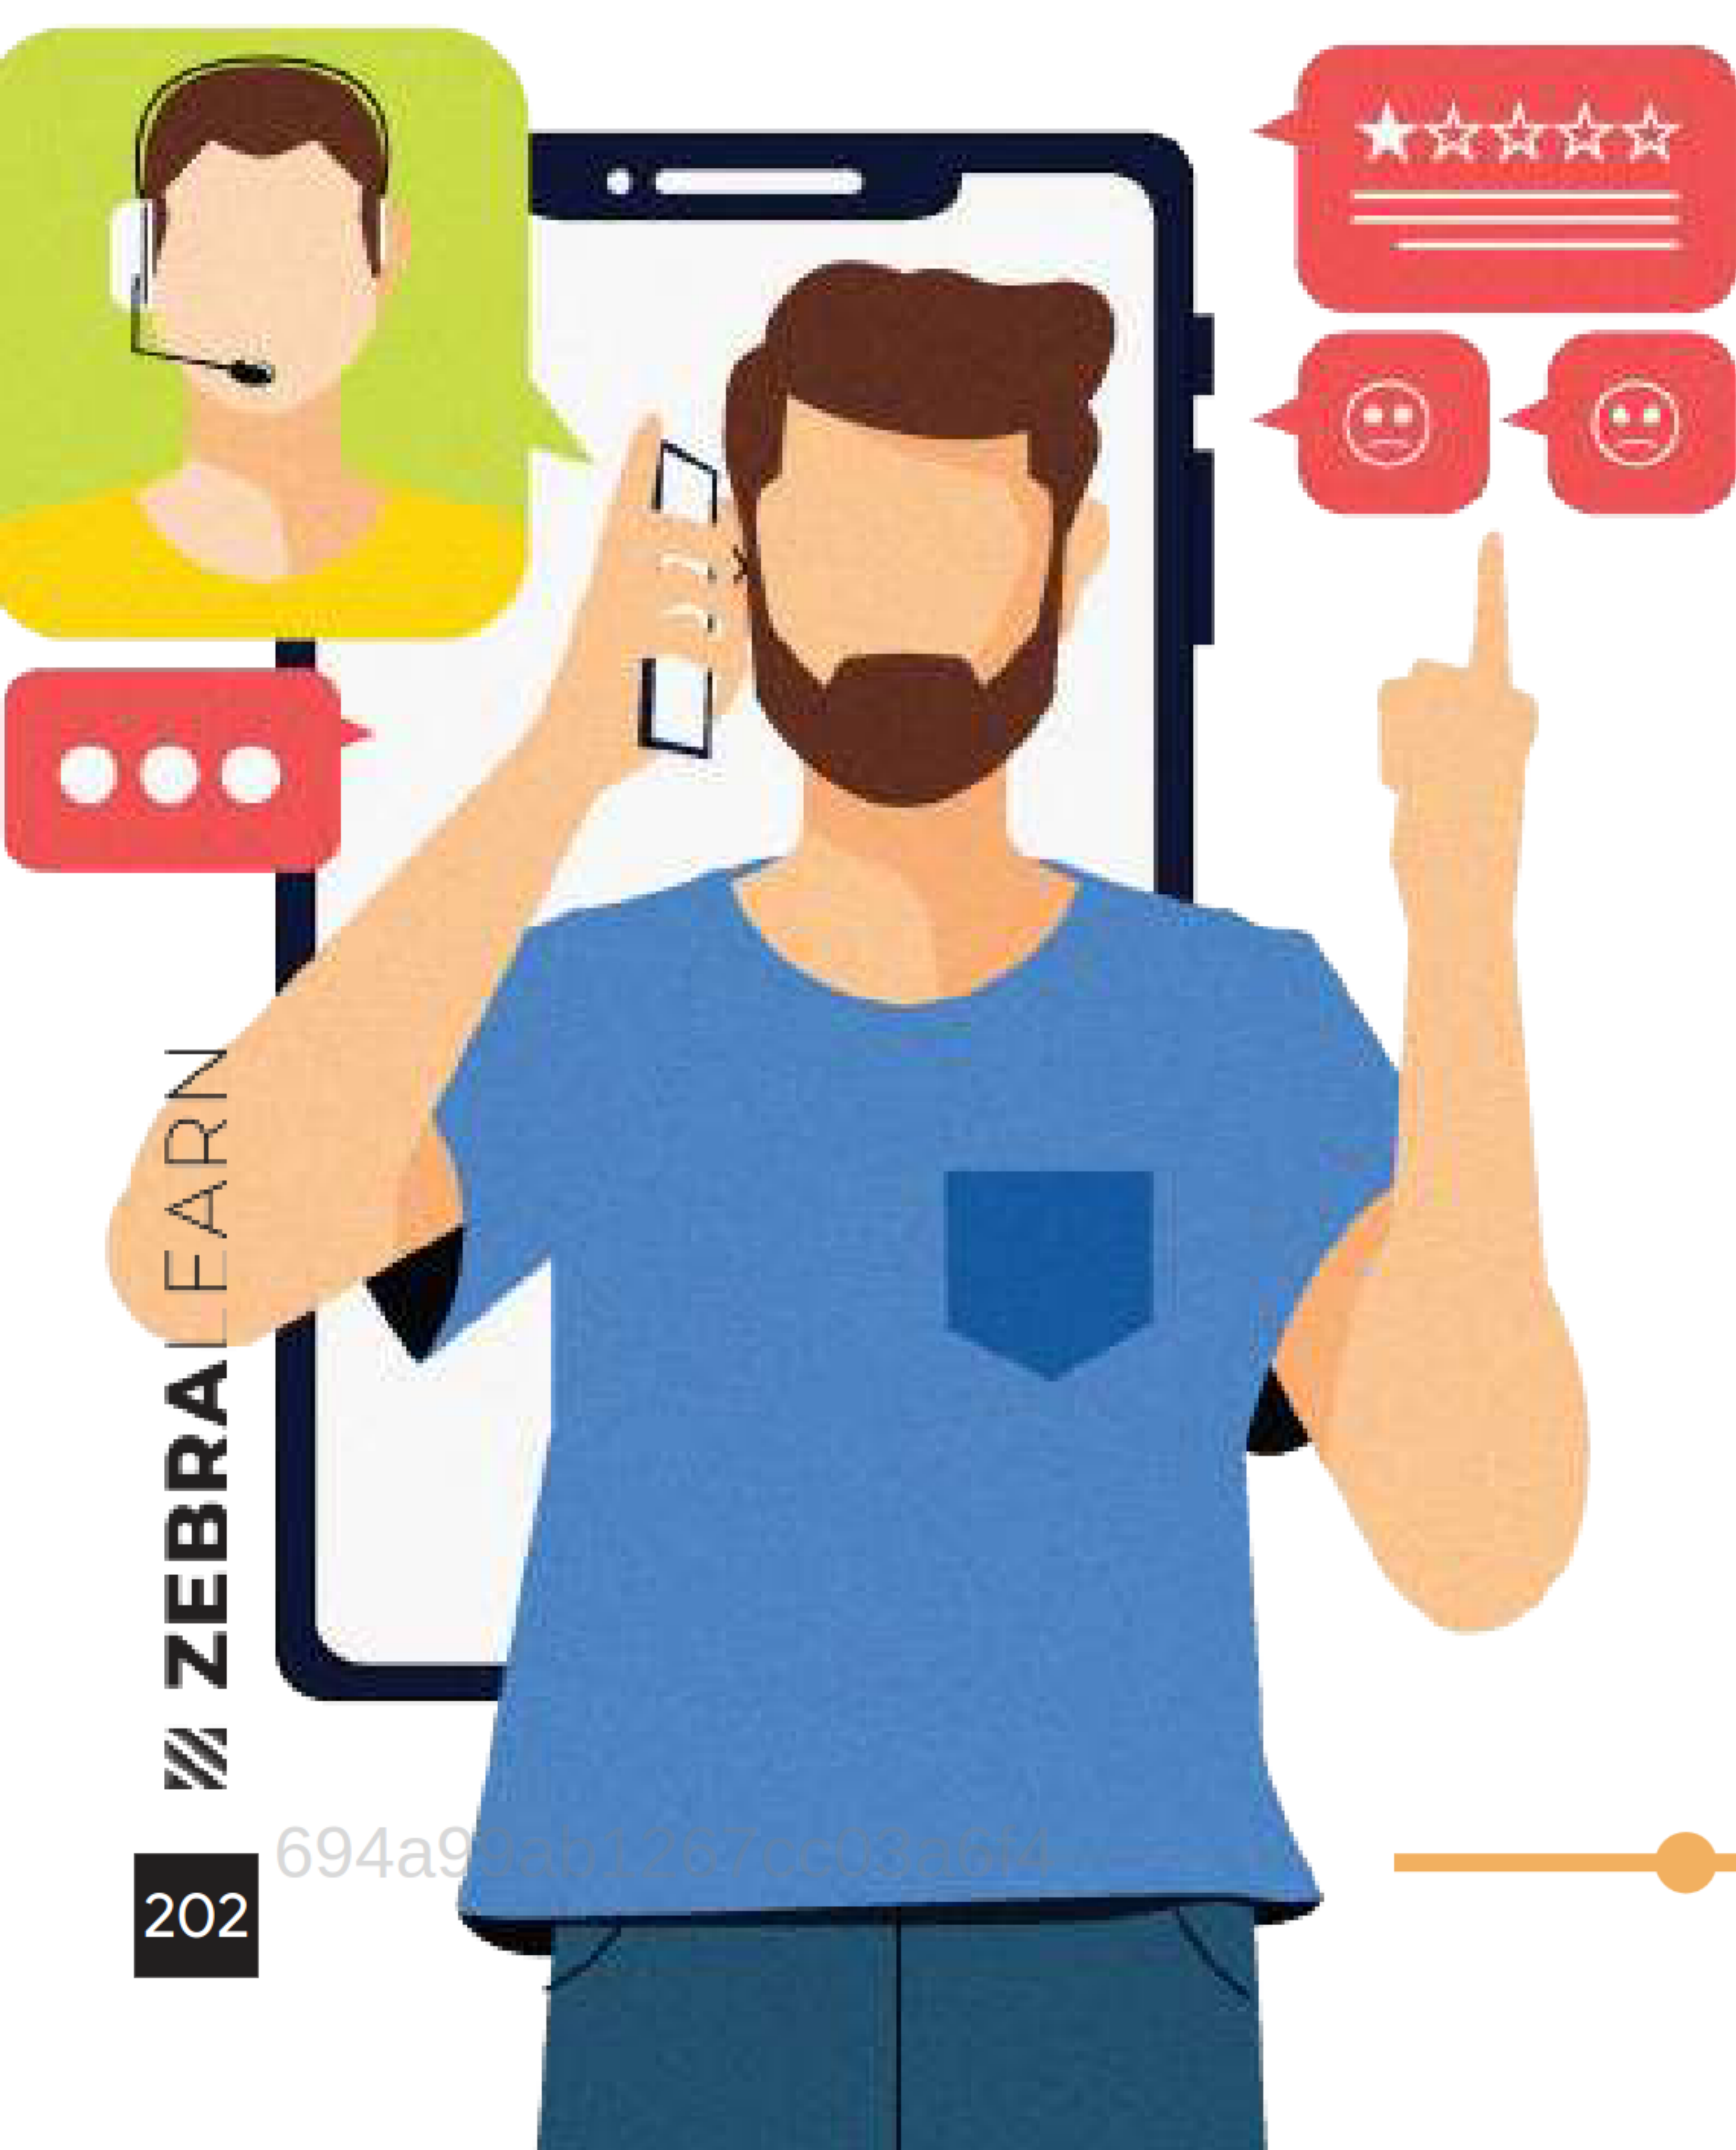

Safety, Working Conditions and Work Load

Unsafe work, absence of safety equipment, poor ventilation, bad illumination, uncomfortable temperatures or high workload.

If these voices are not heard and handled, they result in serious employee relations problems. There is a method to handle grievances.

Handling Grievances

To effectively handle grievances, it is important to be empathetic. However, empathy alone does not do the job. You need a RADAR in place to handle grievances.

1. Receiving Grievances

You need to establish a comprehensive mechanism for collecting grievances. It requires

- System - Develop a formal system for gathering grievances. Ensure that the confidentiality of the grievances is maintained.
- Education - Ensure that all employees are aware of the proper channels to raise grievances. You must include it in the employee handbook and the induction program.
- Responsibility - Assign someone to handle the grievances.
- Acknowledgement - Ensure that every grievance is acknowledged. Only then will people continue to voice their grievances.
