Presume, you do not get your salary in time. There is some problem between your bank and your organization. You have to follow up with your bank and your organization to make the transaction happen. This irritates you and creates dissatisfaction. This is a hygiene issue. If this problem is solved, you will no longer be dissatisfied. The question is whether fixing this problem will create satisfaction and motivate you to work.

Herzberg has the answer.

Herzberg Theory of Motivation

A behavioral scientist, Frederick Herzberg theory says that satisfaction and dissatisfaction at the workplace are caused by different factors. These factors can be divided into two categories.
