

The goals may also differ in nature based on organization context.

Types of goals

There are basically three types of goals. You may use them separately or in combination to optimize the organization's performance.

1. Individual goals

An illustration of a basketball player in a blue jersey and orange shorts, shown from the side, shooting a basketball into a hoop. The player is in the foreground, and the basketball hoop is in the background. The background is a blue sky with white clouds. A chain-link fence is visible behind the player. A pink diagonal line is on the right side of the image.

Individual goals work well when the area of work is segregated and individuals have their specific targets to achieve. For example sales teams. They motivate individuals to perform at their potential.