

There is a clause in the offer cum appointment letter that states your salary is confidential. You must not share your salaries with anyone else. Still people informally compare their salary with others in the organization to check if they are being treated fairly.

To ensure fair treatment, you need to maintain internal equity. Internal equity ensures fairness and consistency in compensation based on responsibilities, skills and experience.

You can ensure internal equity by defining compensation norms for a job and establish external parity through compensation benchmarking. Let's start by understanding compensation benchmarking.
