

6. Implement

After deciding salary ranges and anchoring, you should plan for implementation. You need to see the placement of your people in the salary range.

If you have a lesser attrition rate and most of your people are in the top (fourth) quartile then it might be possible that you are paying more for the job.

You need to bring in more people in the bottom (first) quartile. At the same time, if you have more people in the bottom (first) quartile and your attrition rates are high, you might consider adjusting the salary of the employees.

Salary Adjustment

Salary adjustment refers to changes in employees' salaries. It depends upon the performance, cost of living, and industry standards. There are four key reasons for adjusting salaries:

1. Merit Increase

You may provide employees with salary increments based on their performance contributions. This way, you can provide additional incentives to high performers and discourage low performers from continuing.
