

4.1 Why do Most Product Launches Fail?

1. Product Market Fit is not Right

A common reason for failure is the lack of Product Market Fit, where the product does not align with the needs and desires of consumers. This often results from a poor understanding of the buyer persona, which requires a detailed understanding of the customer.

Sounds like a perfect idea, right?

Unfortunately, it didn't turn out that way.

Product's Performance

Let's take a trip down memory lane. Remember the Tata Nano?

Tata Motors launched it in 2008 with grand ambitions. They aimed to create the world's cheapest car, providing an affordable option for India's middle and lower-middle classes.

Consumers perceived the Nano as a “cheap” car rather than an affordable one, negatively impacting its image. Additionally, safety concerns and competition from other small cars led to poor sales.

