Building a buyer persona involves designing a detailed profile of your ideal customer. This persona should be based on research and insights about your target customers, and it should answer questions like:

- ➡ Who is this product for?
- ➡ Whose needs are catered?
- ➡ What will excite prospective buyers more?

1. How Do I Go About Creating One?

Utilising the Value Proposition Canvas

You can use VPC by mapping out the customer segment's pains and gains. First, identify the customer segment, list customer pains and gains, and then identify products or services that cater to their pains and provide gains. This is how you can collect customer feedback on your prototypes or MVPs and keep track of pain points and solutions.
