

Identify the product's category based on the following criteria:

Involvement Required from the Consumer

The level of involvement required from the consumer side is how much time they invest when they see your product or consider purchasing it until they actually make the purchase. This involvement varies based on product complexity, consumer attachment, and the extent of research or decision-making required.

For instance, High-involvement purchases require careful consideration, such as buying a professional camera, while low-involvement purchases, like cookies, are made with minimal thought, often influenced by small ad campaigns.

High Involvement

High Value and Well Thought

Offer Free Demo

Low Involvement

Low Value and Minimal Thought

Offer Free Sample

Now, that you understand the level of consumer involvement a product requires, leverage this knowledge to boost your profitability. consumer perceptions, communication channels,

For high-involvement products like professional cameras or cars, consider offering comprehensive demos, trial periods, and personalised consultations to deepen consumer engagement.

For low-involvement items, such as cookies or toothpaste, use creative advertising, engaging social media campaigns, and free samples to spark interest and drive impulse purchases.

Additionally, conducting surveys and gathering feedback can provide valuable insights into consumer preferences, helping you fine-tune your marketing strategies and product offerings. By actively engaging consumers at every stage of their decision-making process, you can build trust, enhance brand loyalty, and significantly boost your sales.

