Speciality Goods

Caters to highly specific consumer preferences. Unique feature + High quality + Exclusive brand image

Speciality goods are products that cater to a highly specific consumer desire and are often associated with unique features, high quality, or an exclusive brand image. They are targeted at a niche audience with particular tastes or preferences. Examples of speciality goods include Apple products, Dyson hair dryers, luxury watches, designer handbags, and artificial foods.

Unsought Goods

Necessary goods not actively required. Not Purchase until need arises.

Consumers purchasing shopping goods often research options, compare features, evaluate prices and quality, and assess different brands or models. They may not think about purchasing the product until the need arises. Examples include nebulisers for respiratory conditions, fire extinguishers for safety, insurance policies, and funeral services.
