

4.3 Crafting a Go-to-Market Strategy

Once you have thoroughly understood your audience persona and the underlying consumer behaviour, you're equipped to design a marketing strategy that relates to your target audience.

1. Devising a Go-to-Market Strategy

Segmentation

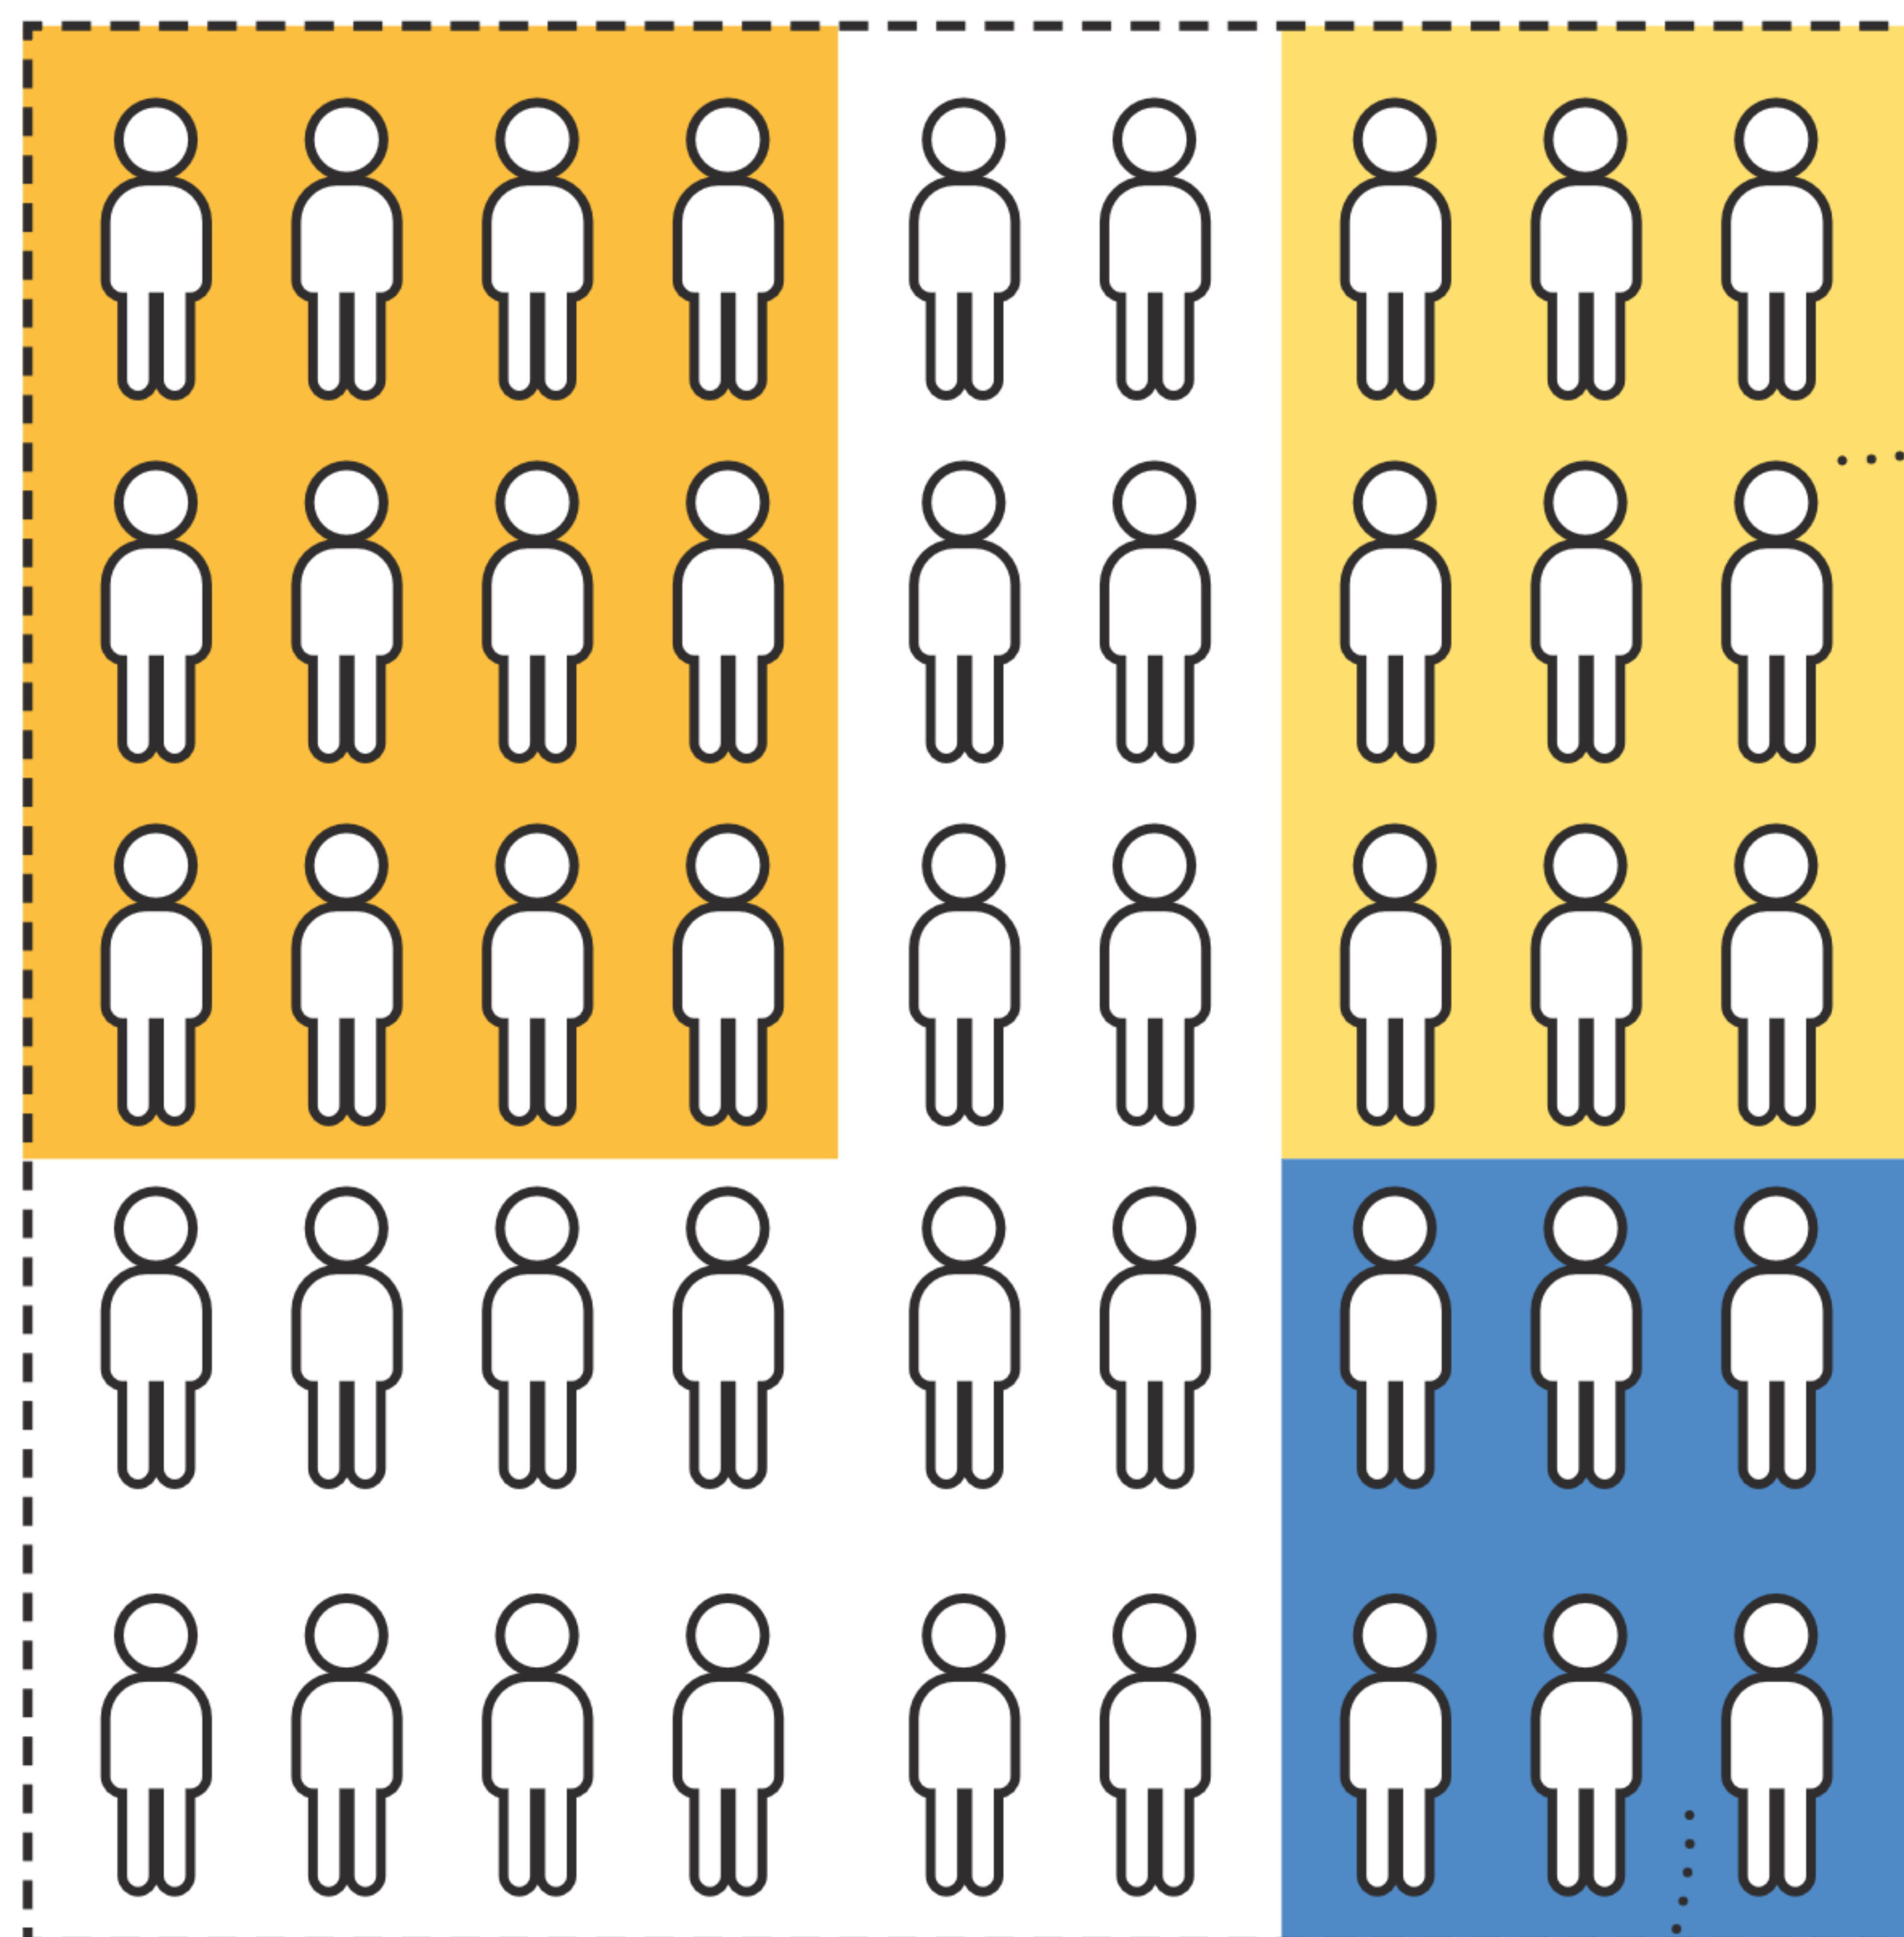

After knowing consumer personas, it's time to understand segmentation. It is the process of splitting a target market into different groups based on shared characteristics like demographics and psychological similarities.

Market Type

Is your product being sold to everyone, or do you need to reach out to businesses? (B2C, B2B, or B2B2C)

Demographics

Are you targeting a specific age group? Gender? Income? Location? Profession? (You can use various demographic questions to define your target market.)

Unmet Needs

Which unmet needs are being solved? The VPC model that was explained earlier can be used to keep this in mind while segmenting a target market.

