

Emotional Marketing

Emotional marketing uses the feelings and emotions of consumers to create a deeper connection with a brand. When people feel emotionally connected to a brand, they are more likely to buy it over to competitors

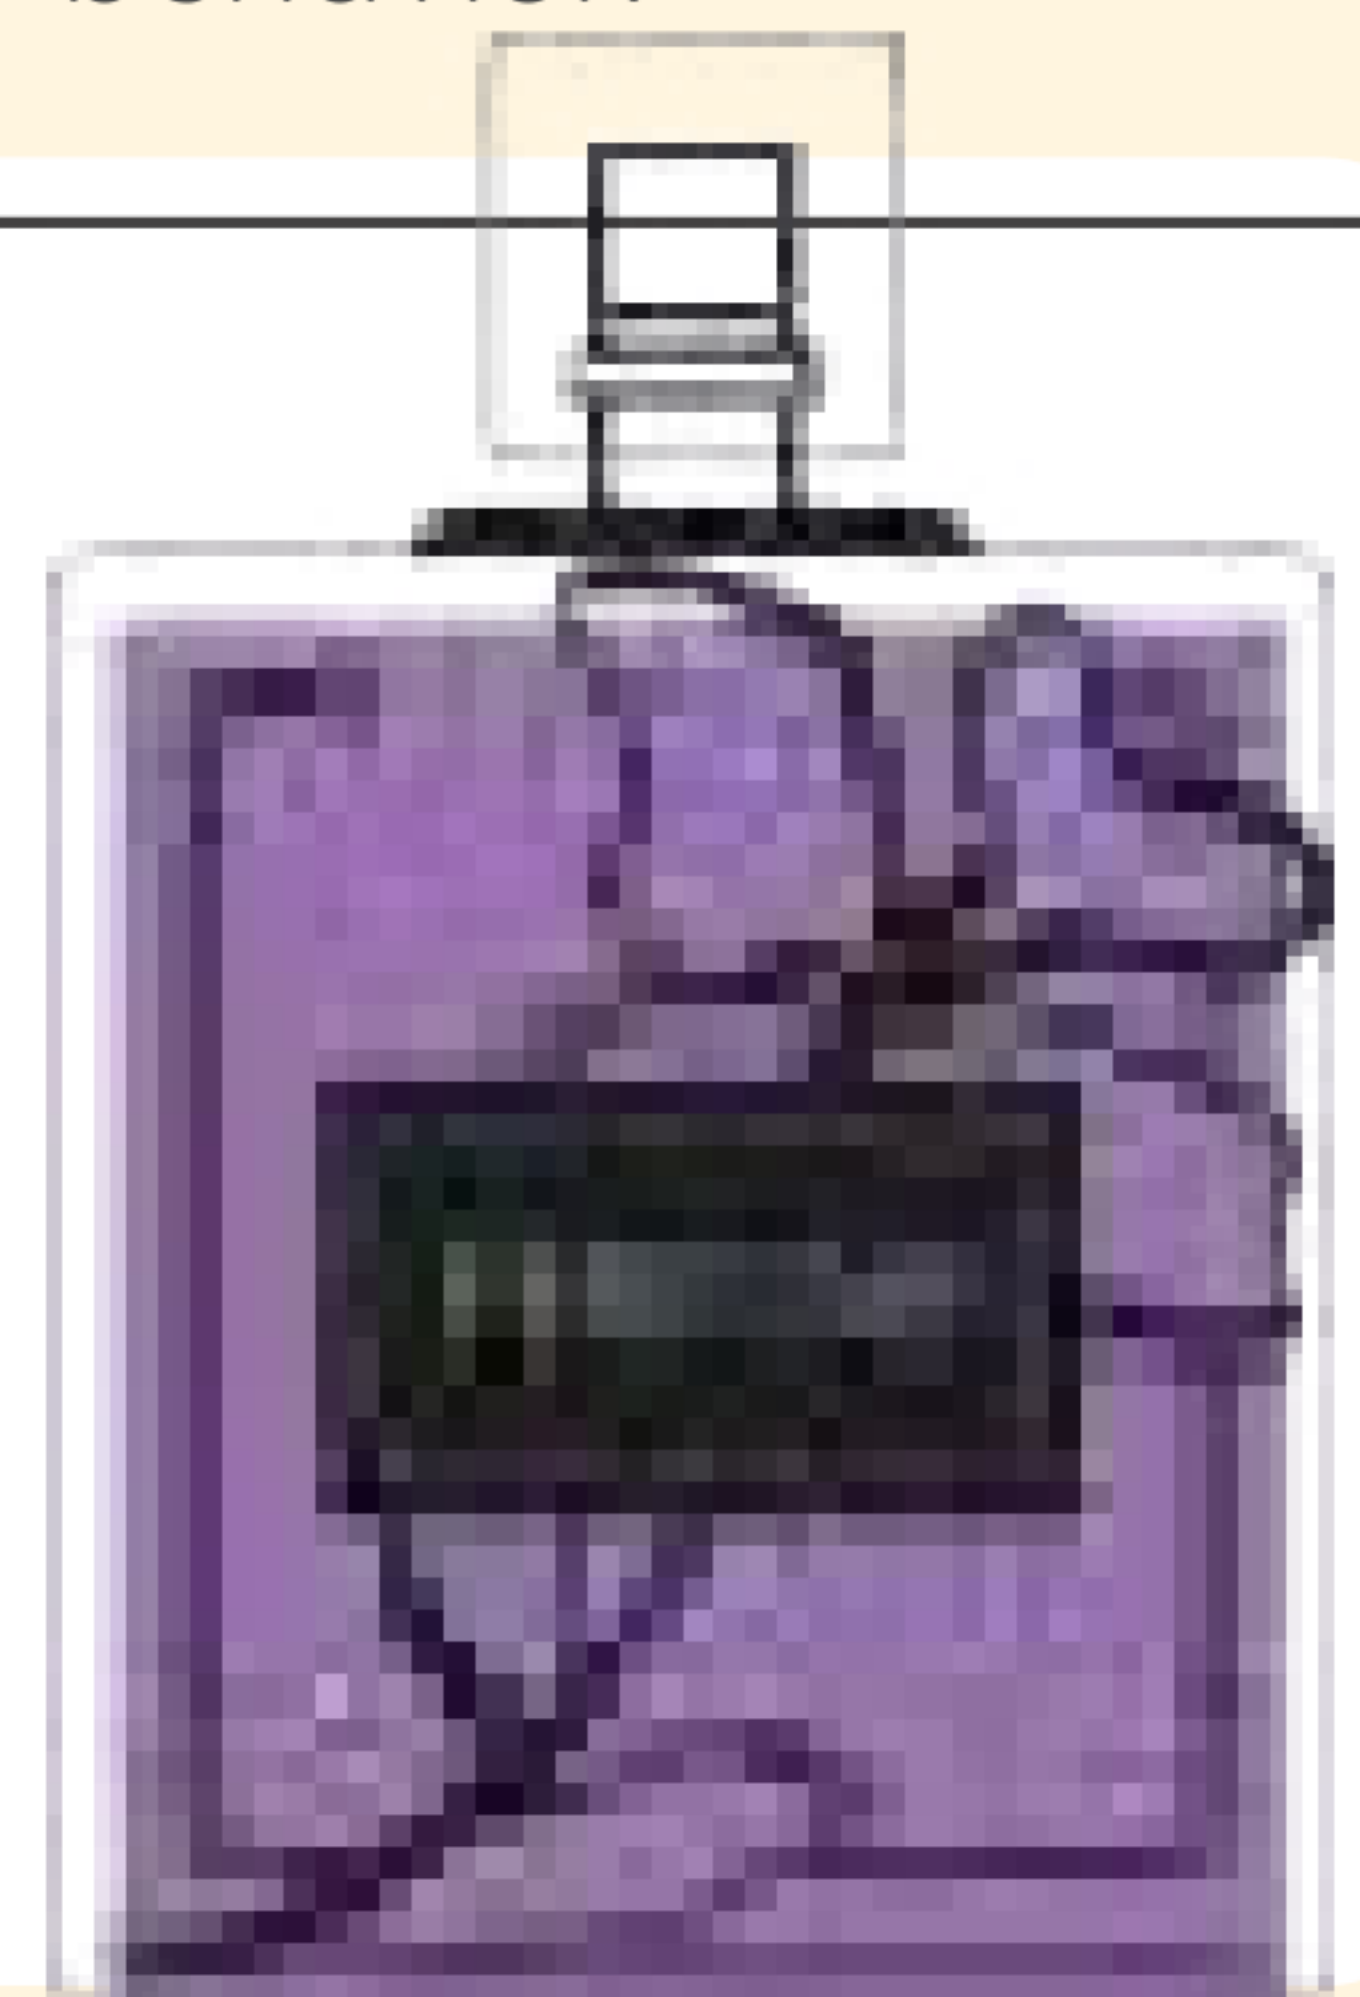

Make Use of Colour Psychology

Colour psychology demonstrates that different colors evoke specific emotions and perceptions, making it a powerful tool for influencing consumer behavior.

For example, if you're launching a product in the luxury segment, using the colour purple can help convey a sense of sophistication, elegance, and exclusivity to customers.

*Elegance & Sophistication
In A Bottle!*

➡ This is because purple has long been associated with royalty and luxury due to its rarity and historical significance. Therefore, using a purple colour can communicate the premium nature of your product to customers.