

4.5 Keller's Brand Equity Model Building Lasting Connections with Your Audience

Brand equity is the highest level of alignment a company can have with its customers. When built strategically, it transforms a brand from being just another option to becoming the first choice in customers' minds. Keller's Brand Equity Model explains how brands move from awareness to deep emotional connections, fostering loyalty and advocacy.

The Customer-Based Brand Equity model consists of four key building blocks:

Brand Salience (Awareness & Recognition)

Brand salience refers to how easily customers recognise and are aware of a particular brand. It's about making your brand stand out and ensuring it's top-of-mind when customers need a product or service. This can be done by raising brand awareness through marketing efforts such as advertising, social media marketing, and other promotional activities.
