

Common intermediaries engaged in distribution channels include the following.

A. Wholesalers

Wholesalers are intermediaries who buy products in large quantities directly from manufacturers and then distribute them in smaller quantities to retailers. They act as intermediaries between manufacturers and retailers, facilitating the movement of goods through the supply chain. Wholesalers purchase it at a lower price per unit through bulk orders and then supply them to retailers.

B. Retailers

Retailers purchase smaller quantities from wholesalers for resale to end consumers. Here, the products reach us through retail shops. Retailers benefit from the convenience.

