

F. Online Platforms/Aggregators/ Booking Platforms

Online platforms, aggregators, and booking platforms serve as intermediaries between sellers, service providers, and buyers, facilitating transactions and connecting them through online platforms. Examples include e-commerce platforms like Amazon and eBay, as well as service aggregators like Practo and Urban Company. Sellers pay fees for using the platform. This provides buyers with the convenience of shopping or booking with access to many options, comparing prices, and then making a decision.

G. Logistics and Transportation Providers

Logistics and transportation are important for the movement of goods from manufacturers to customers. This includes deliveries, storage, and shipping from warehouses.

H. Freelancers/ Individual Entities

Freelancers and individual entities operate independently, offering expertise in fields such as graphic design, consulting, programming, and more, working on their own time and from any location. End users hire freelancers for specific skills or knowledge. For example, if a company needs a logo, they can hire a freelancer who can create one for them and pay them accordingly.
