

C. Selective

Selective distribution is a combination of exclusive and intensive distribution. Manufacturers choose to sell their products in a limited number of outlets, but they're selective about which ones they partner with. They want to expand, but they also want to maintain a sense of exclusivity and quality.

For example, a high-end rug manufacturer sells products in selected stores known as luxury goods, ensuring they reach more customers while maintaining their prestige.

Manufacturer

Distributor

