

The following are the types of models.

A. E-commerce Website

Build your own e-commerce website by planning, choosing a domain name, platform selection, design and customisation, product setup, payment gateway, shipping, security, testing, launching, and maintaining it.

Bewakoof.com is a popular Indian online fashion brand known for its trendy apparel and accessories. They have built a robust e-commerce website that offers a wide range of products.

B. Selling via Social Media

You can sell on social media platforms like Instagram, Linked-In, and Facebook, which involve using these platforms to showcase your products or services directly to customers.

This is how it works.

➡ You can create a business page, upload visually appealing content, actively engage with your audience, generate leads to your website, and use paid advertising tools. By leveraging social media platforms, you can reach a wider audience, engage with potential customers directly, grow your business, and increase sales.

User Generated Content and Meme Culture

Liked by Customer, hence, They Bought the Products

Glossier is the best brand that utilises this approach to the fullest. It's a skincare and makeup brand that has successfully leveraged social media platforms like Instagram to build a strong direct-to-consumer presence. They engage with their audience through visually appealing content and user-generated campaigns, fostering a community around their brand.

