

Business-to-Consumer (B2C) Model

In the business-to-consumer (B2C) model, businesses sell their products directly to consumers, but there are certain intermediary channels involved between the business and the consumer. This helps to reach a broader audience

McCain Foods is an ideal example of a brand that has effectively utilised the business-to-consumer (B2C) model through various distribution channels. They have made their products available not only through traditional retail stores and chains but also through popular e-commerce platforms like Blinkit (formerly Grofers), Swiggy Instamart, and others.

