

On the other hand, intrinsic motivation comes from within. If you're passionate about an industry, enjoy solving problems, and find fulfillment in the process of building something meaningful—regardless of financial rewards—you are intrinsically motivated. True entrepreneurs thrive on the journey itself, not just the outcome.

What Happens When Financial Rewards and Achievements are Absent?

Extrinsically motivated individuals often appear successful because they chase rewards like big paychecks or prestigious achievements. Their drive for external recognition can make them excel in jobs or studies. However, when expected rewards don't materialize, they may struggle with perseverance and lose motivation quickly.

Myth of Startups

- ✓ Big paychecks or closing deals
- ✓ Desire for external recognition and rewards

Reality

- ✓ Challenges
- ✓ Slow Growth

