

➡ If you have a product and an existing market, analyse the competitors in the markets and make a strategic plan to compete.

➡ However, if your idea solves a problem that has never been addressed before, you're entering a new market. Here, focus on creating awareness of the problem and educating customers about the solution. This involves creating a market from the ground up by raising awareness, demonstrating the value of your product, and persuading people of its necessity.

Building a market requires innovation and efforts to rethink traditional approaches. You are required to create new customer behaviours or provide something that addresses their unmet needs. This lesson is valuable for all entrepreneurs, even for those planning to enter existing markets, as it leads to great learning. There are many examples, like Dropbox, Airbnb & Zomato.
