

Psychological Segmentation

It involves dividing the market based on customers’ lifestyles, values, interests, and attitudes. Businesses can understand the psychological aspects of consumer behaviour. For example, in the fitness industry, businesses might target segments that are health-conscious, environmentally aware, or seeking community engagement.

Behavioural Segmentation

This involves dividing customers based on their behaviours, such as purchasing patterns, product usage, and brand loyalty. This allows businesses to understand their target customers’ behaviours and create marketing strategies and products accordingly.

For example, businesses may create segments for first-time buyers, loyal customers, or those who make frequent purchases.

