

It also depends on the capabilities of potential newcomers. If established companies from other geographic regions or industries possess the resources, expertise, and reputation to enter the market easily, the threat of entry increases. Overall, the threat of new entrants can impact the dynamics of an industry by influencing prices, costs, and profit potential.