

Cash Flow Statement

The cash flow statement is the movement of cash in and out of a company. It includes the cash inflows and outflows from three main sources: operations, investments, and financing activities.

Operating activities represent how much cash the company generates or uses from its core business operations. Investing activities show the cash flow related to investments in assets like property, equipment, or securities. Financing activities focus on cash flows related to the company’s financing activities, such as borrowing money, repaying debt, issuing or repurchasing stock, and paying dividends.

Analysing the above parameters helps investors understand how the company is managing its cash flow. Hence, the cash flow statement is the most intuitive of all the financial statements because it involves cash. The cash flow statement serves as a crucial tool for businesses to track and project their financial performance over time.
