Writing Startupology has been an incredible journey, and I am deeply grateful to everyone who has played a role in shaping this book and my entrepreneurial path.

First, to Mom and Dad—your unwavering belief in me has been my foundation. No matter how uncertain the road, you have always been my strongest support system. To Parul, my constant source of encouragement and balance, your support means the world to me. And to my little fur family—Pookhis, Choongles, and Balloo—thank you for your unconditional love, endless joy, and for always reminding me that life is about more than just work.

To my sister, Visha—I have learned more from you than you know. Your wisdom, resilience, and perspective have influenced me in ways I never fully expressed. Whether through direct advice or just by being yourself, you have shaped my thinking, and for that, I am deeply grateful.

A heartfelt and special thank you to Anjali Bhardwaj, without whom this book would not be what it is. From conducting deep research to shaping the structure and flow of ideas, she played a pivotal role in bringing clarity and depth to Startupology. She challenged my thinking, refined key concepts, and ensured that this book remains practical and valuable for every reader. More than just a contributor, she has been a thought partner throughout this process. Her dedication, intellect, and keen sense of storytelling made this book far better than I could have envisioned alone. In many ways, she is as much a part of Startupology as I am.

To Yash, my partner in crime—thank you for always being in the trenches with me, pushing boundaries, and challenging the status quo. Your energy, drive, and perspective have made the journey all the more exciting. And to Sumit, my trusted teammate—someone I can always depend on and know it will be done.

To Vandana Tolani—I learn from you every day. Your insights, experience, and sharp instincts continue to challenge and inspire me, and I am grateful for the journey we share.
